As a PhD holder in English science drama, my true passion lies in exploring the role that scientific theories play in shaping new trends in culture and literature. Modern science offers theatre criticism unique perspectives, mindsets, and analytical tools that enable us to examine texts beyond the realm of traditional criticism. Conversely, with over twenty years of experience teaching English in Iraq and abroad, I have developed extensive skills in course design, English for Specific Purposes (ESP), and preparing students for Cambridge ESOL exams.
